Alvis TD21 Series II Convertible 1962 RHD Automatic By now many of my classic car friends will know that I have a weak spot for Alvis cars. From the postwar production of this quality British car manufacturer, the TD21 Series II Convertible is, in my opinion, the most exclusive model. Produced in very limited numbers this SII Convertible is regarded by Alvis connoisseurs as the esthetically purest and pleasing variant. The last owner bought this TD21 exactly 20 years ago and had his classic convertible step by step completely reconditioned over the years by the UK Alvis specialist "Red Triangle". The most recent 10,000 GBP bill by this make specialist shows clearly that no expences were spared to maintain this Alvis in tip-top condition. Although after 20 years and having covered only 6.000 miles extra to the original milage of 65.000, this Alvis looks and feels still very 'fresh', the paint showed here and there some micro blistering. After I discoverd on the original "Car Record", from when this TD21 Convertible left the factory in 1962, that the original color was "Seal Grey", I decided to treat my Alvis to a bare metal respray. You surely will agree with me that this stylish Alvis now looks very attractive in her new livery on which the chrome wire wheels and other other trim parts stand out very nicely. The interior trim in dark grey leather + woolen red Wilton carpets together with the leatherette dark grey hood complement the whole picture perfectly. If you are looking for a comfortable 4 seat convertible with a super-classic-Bentley-Continental hint, to use, thanks to the automatic gearbox, as an everyday classic or for relaxed cruising when on roadtrips abroad, this TD21 Series II Convertible is certainly worth looking at.
